

July 19, 1995

CS

Dear Zachary:

Thank you for your recent letter.

I'm a big fan of the Final Fantasy games myself. You'll be happy to hear that Final Fantasy Legend II and Final Fantasy Adventure for Game Boy are still being made, but they may be a little difficult to locate. In general, our company sells only replacement parts directly to consumers, so we do not have a catalog that lists our games. As an alternative, I've listed the telephone numbers of some companies that provide mail order service. They may be able to help you out.

Captron/G & G Software	1-800-262-7462
Service Merchandise	1-800-251-1212
J.C. Penney	1-800-222-6161
Best	1-800-950-2378
Famcom Games	1-206-946-2013

Our Consumer Service Representatives may be able to offer other options.

So are we going to see any more Final Fantasy games? Well, I hate to speculate, so I'm going to advise going right to the source. The Final Fantasy games are made by one of our licensees called Square Soft. As the creators of the series, they would be best able to tell you what's planned for the future. You can contact Square Soft at the following address and telephone number:

Square Soft Inc.
8351 154th Ave. NE, Westpark G-1
Redmond, WA 98052
Consumer Service and Game Play: 1-206-861-0303

You might have heard about some of Square Soft's plans for this year. I know it sounds hard to believe, but I think the projects they have planned may actually surpass Final Fantasy III (my all-time favorite role-playing game!). The 32-meg Chrono Trigger will be coming out in September. It utilizes time travel, science-fiction, and fantasy adventure to create a very original role-playing game. The game's hero, Chrono, is transported into the past and ends up altering the course of history, and with it the future as well. The integral time travel element of the game enables players to alter the game by changing the past, giving players multiple endings and excellent repeat game play value. There are mini-quests, a huge cast of characters, realistic time travel, non-linear game play, and more active and interactive battle scenes than Final Fantasy III!

That's not all. You can also expect to see Secret of Evermore in November. This will be the first role-playing game to utilize Advanced Computer Modeling, the same animation technique that produced the striking graphics in Donkey Kong Country. Lastly, Square Soft will be bringing out the long awaited sequel, Secret of Mana II. I can't wait to try this one out! While Square Soft does not currently have a Final Fantasy game announced, it looks like they're going to have their best year ever!

Thanks again for writing, Zachary. I hope this information helps you. Good luck with all your games. Remember, the best play here!

Sincerely,

NINTENDO OF AMERICA INC.

A handwritten signature in dark ink, appearing to read "Jonathan Stein". The signature is fluid and cursive, with a large initial "J" and a stylized "S".

Jonathan Stein
Consumer Service Representatives